• PERTLE • SPRINGS •

There is no summer resort in Missouri so beautiful, healthy and delightful in its summer associations as these springs. The miniature mountains covered with noble forest trees, the many exquisite lakes circling their base and running like silver threads between the hills, the bold precipices and sleeping valleys conspire to create here a marvel of beauty and to reproduce the charming scenery of Scotland. Literally, from every point vistas of beauty open, and the artist is at a loss to choose his view from the profusion of exquisite scenes. Day after day guests roam over the hills and up the valleys and sail over the quiet lakes, finding each tour more charming than the others. The waters are cool to the taste and invigorating to the system, while the air, refreshing as the mountain breeze, makes the simple living delicious.

Art has lent her aid to adorn these beautiful grounds. A rustic bridge of great length conducts the guest over a dizzying height from hill to hill. Long stairways lead from the valleys to the hill tops. Picturesque buildings are seen peeping through the foliage in curious shapes and many colors. On one lake boats are gliding filled with merry crews; in another, safe bathing is provided for even little children with all the accompaniments of a first-class natatorium. All kinds of games for young and old are on the grounds; and a summer spent here lingers in the memory as a delightful dream. Any description of Pertle Springs is so inadequate that every new visitor breaks forth with the common utterance, "The half has never been told!"

The guests who have passed their summers here are among the leading people of this and other states. Chautauqua and other associations make this their headquarters. In addition to the attractions as a cool, beautiful and healthful resort for summer, Pertle Springs supplies associations with people distinguished in every department of life.

Pertle Springs are situated one and one half miles from Warrensburg on the Mo. P. R. R., and over all lines of travel reduced rates are given. The hotel is so delightfully conducted that in all its arrangements it is a home, and those who, as summer guests, have known Mr. and Mrs. Christopher, have ever after cherished them as highly valued friends.

The following are the attractions at the Springs for the season of 1891:
